The lives of everyone of us are similar to the leaves on a family tree. Just what is actually alive: the leaf or the tree, the individual or the family? What is more real: the unique personal life of the individual, or the multi-generation family history? This book will help you find the key to answering these questions. The newest methods of psychological analysis of the life-path of the individual are presented with an IBM compatible software program LifeLine. The complete set will be useful for everyone whose profession demands deep insight into the life stories and perspectives of other people: teachers, historians, journalists, lawyers, writers, psychologists, and political players as well as for those who are interested in themselves, who care about themselves, and who are striving for success.
